Abstract: Historic Resource Survey for the Fort Worth Stock Yards

Historic preservation consultant Kip Wright began an intensive level architectural and historical survey of the Fort Worth Stock Yards area in August 2015. The project was initiated and contracted by Historic Fort Worth, Inc. Funding for the project has been provided by Historic Fort Worth, the National Trust for Historic Preservation, the Texas Historic Foundation, and the City of Fort Worth. Steps to complete the project include (1) identifying the project survey area, in coordination with Historic Fort Worth staff, (2) consulting previous survey work, including the 1975 nomination of the Fort Worth Stockyards to the National Register of Historic Places and the 1988 Tarrant County Historic Resources Survey, (3) photographing and completing a survey form for all properties within the survey area, (4) delineating a potential historic district boundary, (5) conducting archival research, and (6) publishing of survey report. Survey results will be useful in identifying existing historic properties in the vicinity of the Stock Yards, revising the boundaries of the existing National Register district, serving as a data source for the designation of a local historic district, and planning efforts for the future of Fort Worth's historic resources.

The survey was completed in November 2015 and documented 98 properties. The boundary of the proposed Fort Worth Stock Yards Historic District contains 88 of these properties. Of the buildings in the district, 69 are considered historic properties contributing to the district, and 19 buildings were identified as non-contributing. Included in the 69 contributing buildings are 47 historic properties that were previously documented in the Tarrant County Historic Resources Survey. Several additional buildings have been included in the new, proposed boundary because these buildings were not old enough to be included in the National Register Historic District in 1975. In 1975 only buildings built in 1925 or earlier were included. The new historic district includes buildings built after 1925.

It is important to note that extant buildings located in the industrial area of the Swift Plant are not included in this building count but are included in the proposed historic district boundary. Access to the Swift buildings for survey documentation has yet to be granted by the current property owners. It is essential that the Swift Plant, as well as extant pens, scale houses, loading ramps, and livestock runways, be included in the proposed historic district. These industrial facilities, for the processing of livestock, are the very reason for the existence of this historic district and are vital to the area's uniqueness as a potential National Historic Landmark. Without these industrial facilities, the Stock Yards commercial area loses its historic context and is comparable to any downtown commercial area in the United States: it is the stock yards district without the stock yards. The exclusion of the slaughter house and stock yard areas would be a detriment to the authenticity of the new Fort Worth Stock Yards Historic District.

The proposed boundary of the historic district was drawn, primarily, along property lines. The intent was to include all contributing buildings and features in the Stock Yards area while minimizing the number of non-contributing buildings included in the boundary. The survey area is bounded by 22nd Street on the south, 27th Street on the north, Clinton Street on the west, and the railroad on the east side of the Stock Yards. The proposed district, which contains N. Main Street and Exchange Street as its main axes, is smaller than the National Register Historic District designated in 1975 due to the extensive loss of stock yards pens over the last 40 years. The property types in the district are primarily commercial, but agricultural, institutional, organizational, and residential properties are also included.

The new district is eligible locally because of its significance to the history of Fort Worth, but it is also eligible on a state and national level. In his book Imperial Texas: An Interpretive Essay in Cultural Geography (Austin: University of Texas Press, 1969), D. W. Meinig identifies the Stock Yard's statewide significance as "the Swift and Armour packing plants in Fort Worth marked the direct entry of major national firms lured by local Texas raw materials" (p. 81). He writes that the Stock Yards was an important addition to the Texas economy and "indicative of the general direction of Texas development in the twentieth century" (p. 79). The area is significant on the national level as a major meat producer for the United State through the 1950s. It was a vital shipping point for mules during the First World War and the site of important scientific research for the U.S. livestock industry. Because of its uniqueness, the Stock Yards historic district is potentially eligible for National Register of Historic Places as a National Historic Landmark.

This project will not be finished until July 2016, although the survey phase of the project is complete, historic properties have been identified, and a historic district boundary has been proposed. The project will also include a survey report. The survey report will contain project objectives, research design, a description of the project area, definition of survey methodology, a building inventory with property types, the historic context of the proposed district, a map of the proposed district, and bibliography. The survey, assessment, and recommendations will be completed and finalized following the coordination of all findings with City of Fort Worth historic preservation staff and the Texas Historical Commission.

Architectural Description

General Architectural Description: Mission-style red-brick building with gray concrete cladding and concrete foundation. The façade has a one-story arcade across the front flanked on both sides by two-story office blocks. A large, segmental-arch window dominates the front gable. Side elevations have buttresses and rectangular windows topped by segmental-arch windows. A steel-truss roof structure is over 14,000 square feet of interior space. A glazed monitor roof provides interior light.

Architectural Description

General Architectural Description: 1-story, 4-bay brick building with wood siding on south and west elevations. Building has flat roof and Western-frontier fake-front façade.

☒ Additions, modifications, specify dates: Tax records indicate a 1948 construction date, and old, pre-WW2 retaining wall on property suggests that there may be an historic building at the core of this Faux Frontier makeover.
